Sociologist: New study 'explodes' narrative that people are born 'gay'

lifesitenews.com/opinion/sociologist-new-study-explodes-narrative-that-people-are-born-gay
WASHINGTON, D.C., September 3, 2019 (Mercatornet)
(Abridged for brevity)

The findings of a recently published study explode the false narrative that being "gay" is an innate condition that is controlled or largely compelled by one's genetic makeup. Rebutting decades of research by LGBT scientists for a "gay gene," the study's first author flatly concludes "it will be basically impossible to predict one's sexual activity or orientation just from genetics."

This is putting it gently.

The study found that a person's developmental environment -- the influence of diet, family, friends, neighborhood, religion, and a host of other life conditions -- was twice as influential as genetics on the probability of adopting same-sex behavior or orientation, and that the genetic influence did not come from one or two strong sources but from dozens of genetic variants that each added a small increased propensity for same-sex behavior.

A genetic arrangement based on a large number of markers across the genome means that virtually all human beings have this arrangement, or large portions of it. In other words, not only did the study fail to find some controlling gene for gay identity, it also established that "gay" persons are not genetically distinct from all other human beings in any meaningful sense. "Gay" persons, we might say, have a perfectly normal human genome.

Indeed, the study found that genetic propensity for same-sex behavior is not much different from that of 28 other complex traits or behaviors, and is related to a propensity for other risk-taking behavior such as smoking, drug use, number of sex partners or general openness to new experience. But the longstanding and emphatic claim of gay activists in law and public policy has not been that same-sex activity reflects upbringing or lifestyle factors, but is an inborn difference that is discovered, not developed, a distinct and fixed element of a person's nature that is unchangeable. Emotionally and sexually, same-sex orientation is not a matter of who persons choose to become, they have claimed, but who they already are.

This study pulls the rug out from under such thinking. If "gay and lesbian" persons are genetically normal, what basis is there for considering them a distinct protected class subject to preferential treatment under the law or for prohibiting other genetically normal persons from refusing to engage in same-sex behavior?

The study finds that most persons with the identical genotype as "gay or lesbian" persons (by an approximate ratio of 2 to 1) end up, for various reasons of social environment or development or personal principle, not engaging in same-sex relations. Shouldn't such persons have equal freedom and legitimacy to do so?
